W. C. T. U. COUNTY CONVENTION

A most successful Convention was held by the Bedford County Woman's Christian Temperance Union in St. John's Reformed church, Bedford, on June 18 and 17.

Local unions were well represented by enthusiastic delegates whose reports showed the county in excellent working condition.

A marked increase in membership resulted from recent drives in the various towns, all of which points to an increased sentiment in favor of Prohibition and better law enforcement.

The presence of State Vice-President, Miss Amanda Landes, of Lancaster, was a source of great inspiration, and her Thursday evening address on "The Lord's Prayer Answered Around the World", made more realistic the World Vision looking toward a speedy world redemption from the curse of Drink, through the united efforts of Christians.

The speaker convinced her hearers that the battle is not yet over, but that Eternal Vigilance on the part of the Christian church and general reform workers will win the day.

A practical discussion on "Social Problems" introduced by Mrs. J. C. Lyon, of Bedford, was an interesting number of the Thursday afternoon session. Also, a White Ribbon Pageant rendered by L. T. L. members was a happy introduction to the evening meeting.

The social following the evening meeting was thoroughly enjoyed by the guests. A reading by Miss Landes and pipe organ selections by Miss Grace Stewart added greatly to the social hour.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Miss L. D. Shuck, Bedford; Vice-President, Mrs. Elizabeth Stoler, Saxton; Rec. Secretary, Miss Nellie Thomas, Fishertown; Cor. Secretary, Mrs. J. Reed Irvine, Bedford; Treasurer, Mrs. A. C. Smith, Bedford.

The county officers are indebted to the local president, Mrs. A. C. Blackburn, for her splendid cooperation and that of her committees in making the 1921 W. C. T. U. Convention a "Red Letter Event" in our Union's history.

EXHIBITION GAME WITH PITTSBURGH COLLEGIANS

Plans for the coming game of base ball next Tuesday, June 28, with the Pittsburgh Collegians are developing nicely and everyone is looking forward to the date with the desire to see our team play the best professional base ball game in the country. Northside Park is getting a thorough cleaning and new bleachers are also being erected for this game.

The Bedford team is down to hard practice and are making several changes in order to have the strongest team possible for this game.

All business places in Bedford will be closed from 3 to 5 p. m. in order to allow everyone an opportunity to see the game.

Do not miss this game as it will be the banner attraction of the season. Game will start promptly at 3:00 p. m.

GRANGE PICNIC.

Bedford County Pomona Grange will hold its fourth Annual Picnic on Wednesday, July 27, in Fyan's Grove, 1 1/2 miles from Bedford.

John A. McSparran, Master of Pa. State Grange, and others will make addresses. Everybody invited. Watch for future announcements.

CUMBERLAND LICENSES

Marriage licenses were issued in Cumberland recently to the following couples: John R. Clites, of Hyndman, and Bessie E. Leydig, of Buffalo Mills.

John M. Clark and Ruth J. Schetromp, of Everett.

PLEASANT OUTING.

A crowd of young folks from Ellerslie and vicinity left in cars on Sunday morning for Bedford Springs where they spent a very enjoyable day. Miss Helen Billman and Ruth Morgart joined the party at Bedford. The remainder of the party were: Misses Maria and Esther Kendall and Evelyn and Madeline Wendrick, of Ellerslie, Messrs. Marshall Lohr, Jack Means and Luther Birch, of Cumberland, Ray Blume and Richard Kendall, of Ellerslie.

This office will be closed on Tuesday from 3 to 5 p. m. All the force is going to the ball game between the Pittsburgh Collegians and Bedford. The biggest game of the season so far promises to be a lively tussle from start to finish. We are giving the base ball team a boost by our presence and we hope everybody interested in good base ball will turn out and see this game. Bedford is not putting on any higher talent, it all belongs to Bedford, so if the victory is ours, it will not be shared by any one else, and will be ours complete. This game should be a test of the strength of our boys and we hope they will measure up to the grill they are going to pass through.

G. O. P. HAS NO "PIE"

FOR NEGRO VOTERS.

Colored Leaders Told Whites Will Get All Jobs Needing Senate's Consent.

Washington, June 19.—Leading negro politicians have been told they will not be given positions under the Harding Administration that have to be passed upon by the Senate. That is understood to mean the jobs of Register of the Treasury and Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia will go to white men.

This agreement was not reached until Will H. Hays had quit as Chairman of the National Committee and was succeeded by John T. Adams. Mr. Hays opposed the Stump plan to force the negro to the background and eliminate him as an issue in the South. His opposition was not open to and aggressive but strong enough to interfere with plans to build up a "white Republican Party."

Chairman Adams, it is understood, is more friendly to the Stump idea. In the distribution of patronage the Southern negro will be ignored if white men can be had for the jobs. Republican leaders are experiencing some trouble in organizing a formidable party of whites in South Carolina. They have been flirting with former Senator John L. Mc Laurin, Senator Tillman's colleague, who could have the job of pie counter attendant for his State if he would agree to reorganize the G. O. P. forces along white lines.

The new Southern policy will accord only secondary consideration to the so-called "black and tan" element. Chairman Adams will take up the situation on his return to Washington from Iowa. A series of conferences has been arranged and it is understood the problem will be threshed out. This change of attitude is bound to affect the party in the North, where in some states if the negro votes should turn to the Democrats they would carry with them the balance of power.

BODY OF GEARY DIEHL ARRIVES

The body of H. Geary Diehl, who was killed in action in France arrived in Bedford last Saturday evening from Altoona, and was taken to the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Diehl, of Friend's Cove, from whence interment was made in the Cove Brick Reformed cemetery on Tuesday at 10 a. m.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Walter C. Pugh, the young man's pastor. Rev. Pugh was assisted by Rev. J. Albert Eyler, of Bedford, and the local minister, Rev. R. R. Jones. A military escort accompanied the body and the P. O. S. of A. conducted services at the grave.

LOCAL YOUNG FARMERS AT STATE COLLEGE.

Six young farmers of Bedford county journeyed to the Pennsylvania State College this week to take part in the special program for young farmers of the state. Gordon Hull, Schellsburg, Harold Hoover, Everett and Katherine Seese, New Paris represented this county in the dairy judging contest there. Mary Thomas Schellsburg; Charles Nunemaker, New Paris and Rayford Wright of Alum Bank composed a team to give a demonstration showing the use of the Babcock test in the dairy industry.

The County Agent arranged for transportation of the boys and girls who left Monday morning and will return the latter part of the week. He will also be out of the county for the week attending the summer conference of the Extension Department held in connection with farmers Week at State College.

BEDFORD TEAM AGAIN MEETS DEFEAT

On the Berlin diamond on last Friday the local team again met defeat at the hands of the Berlin team. The game was a very exciting one as evidenced by the score 7-6. The score follows.

COLD THAT MAKES THE PLANTS GROW

It is not the cold of the autumn that makes trees and plants go into a dormant state for the winter, according to F. V. Colville, a botanist, who reports the results of his experiments to the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences (Washington). Nor is it the coming of warm weather that rouses them from their lethargy.

If plants that have once begun to hibernate be kept in a warm place all winter they will continue to sleep indefinitely. But if they have been subjected to cold they will grow normally as soon as spring comes. In the Department of Agriculture they have installed machines which will submit any plant or any part of a plant to cold, and experiments with these show that if one part of a plant be chilled while the rest of it remains exposed to warm air the chilled part will begin to send forth leaves and flowers while the rest is still hibernating.

Daniel Webster Radebaugh.

Daniel Webster Radebaugh was born in Bedford on Nov. 29, 1844 and died in Philadelphia on June 16, 1921.

He was a printer and served his apprenticeship and learned his trade with the Bedford Inquirer while it was under the management of Mr. Dunbarrow.

During the Civil War he served with the 55th Penna. Volunteers, and was honorably discharged from service after Lee's surrender.

In 1865 he moved to Pittsburgh and served on the Gazette, Mail, News and Times. He was proven the fastest type-setter in the country in his day.

Mr. Radebaugh was married in 1871 to Jennie B. Hannan and lived in Pittsburgh until 1918 when he moved to Philadelphia.

Two sons, George Oster and Reed, along with the widow survive. There are also four grand-children.

SHROVER'S RUN BRIDGE COLLAPSES.

On last Thursday evening just as a band of autoists in a truck crossed over the Shrover's run bridge east of Bedford, the bridge collapsed and fell into the stream below. Now tourists have to detour from the new Ford garage and around by Chalybeate, striking the Lincoln Highway at the east end of the Narrows bridge.

A rumor is afloat that he state will rebuild this bridge by concrete, though there has been no move so far toward that end.

ANOTHER BEDFORD COUNTY GIRL HONORED.

Miss Ruth O'Shea, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James O'Shea, of Bedford, Route 3, graduated recently from the Westmoreland Hospital training school for nurses at Gettysburg, Pa. Miss O'Shea received first honors of her class. She is a graduate of the Bedford County Public schools.

CLOCK THAT IS A PUZZLE

There is a strange clock at Beaver, Pa. Whenever the mercury goes down to zero the town clock begins striking and continues to do so until some one climbs the tower and muffs the bell. This has been the case as long as the oldest inhabitants can remember. Expert clockmakers have been called in to investigate it from time to time, but so far none of them has been able to solve the mystery.

After all it is better for a girl to have too many strings to her beau than to have too many beaux on a string.

EX-COUNTY COMMISSIONER APPLEMAN DEAD.

George H. Appleman, former county commissioner, school director, tax collector and prominent farmer, died at his home at Baker's Summit, this county, Saturday morning, June 11, death following a long illness from a complication of diseases.

Mr. Appleman was the son of Jacob and Mary Pote Appleman and was born on November 11, 1852. The early part of his life was spent with his parents in the Cove, during which time he learned the blacksmith trade with his father at Bloomfield. When seventeen years of age he went to Roaring Spring and began to work for himself and continued for three years. He then turned his attention to farming and in 1887 bought a portion of the Pote homestead at Baker's Summit, where he had resided since, and where he conducted his farm along with his public service.

Mr. Appleman was a Democrat. He served his district for five years as justice of the peace; was a school director for twelve years; township auditor for three years and was serving as township assessor when elected to the board of Bedford county commissioners. At the expiration of his first term, he was re-elected serving eight years to the entire satisfaction of the people of this county. His record as a public official was always above reproach and his official acts were clean and praiseworthy.

He was united in marriage on June 18, 1871, with Miss Susan Pote who survives with the following sons and daughters: Harry W., of Ore Hill; Cora E. Garrigan, of Galva, Ill.; Edgar E. and James O., of Baker's Summit; Charles W., an attorney at Indianapolis, Ind., Miles W., of Roaring Spring; Mrs. H. O. Long, of Homers Gap; Mrs. Claude Dick, of Pototown; and Elmer F. Appleman, of Altoona, a fireman in the Pennsy yard. He also leaves a sister, Mrs. Hannah Croft.

Funeral services were held Tuesday at 10 o'clock at the Holsinger church, where his pastor, Rev. C. F. Gephart, of Woodbury, conducted the services. Interment in the Holsinger cemetery.

SPECIAL SERVICES

Next Sunday, June 26th., will be a great day at St. John's Reformed church. There will be the regular sessions of the Sunday School at 9:45 to be followed at eleven o'clock by the Children's Day services. The teachers of the Junior, Primary and Beginners departments have arranged a fine program which will be rendered at that time. At 7:30 P. M. Mr. Wayne H. Bowers, of Chambersburg, Pa., for six years a missionary in SPAIN will give an illustrated lecture, using many beautiful slides to reveal to us the remarkable things with which he met in that ancient country. Perhaps we have always thought of Spain as being Christian country and we will therefore, be the more interested in seeing and hearing what a missionary found to do in that country. Mr. Bowers is a young man of strong personality and is sure not to disappoint. A cordial invitation is extended to the public for both services.

MT. DAVIS, HIGHEST POINT IN STATE IS DEDICATED BY CLUB

'Huckleberry Flat,' Somerset County, 3213 Ft. Above Sea Level

Mt. Davis, the highest point in the state, located about five miles west of Salisburg, Somerset County, was dedicated Saturday under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Alpine Club. This point is 3213 feet above sea level and is known as 'Huckleberry flat', being covered with bushes that bear the luscious fruit.

U. S. Bench Mark There

A the peak of the protruding rock the United States geological survey has fastened its metal bench mark, designating Mount Davis as the highest point in Pennsylvania. The state's recently found highest point is named Mount Davis in honor of John N. Davis, who died some years ago. He owned a large section of Negro mountain, of which Mount Davis is a part. He was a veteran of the civil war, a preaching elder of the Church of the Brethren, an expert surveyor and an early booster of the public school system in this section of the state.

On that part of Negro mountain in the vicinity of Mount Davis has been enacted some of the wildest history of Pennsylvania. Negro mountain was named for a negro slave killed by Indians while battling for civilization. Samuel McNair was one of the eighteen pioneers who established the Jersey settlement along the southern border of what is now Somerset county. It was the first white settlement in the country. The eighteen pioneers came here from New Jersey in the fall of 1763. McNair was from Virginia and owned two slaves. In the spring of 1770 he went back to Virginia for his slaves and on the return trip one of the slaves fell avictim to the Indians. Ever since the whole range has been known as Negro mountain.

Rev. J. Albert Eyler will preach in the Frame church of the Clear Ridge charge on Next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

There is a difference in the use of words. Tell a girl she is a vision of loveliness and another time tell her she is a sight to behold and then run.

FIRE LEAVES

Charred Bodies of John, Aged 5; Jordan, Age 2; Four-Weeks-Old Baby, and Anna Becker, Age 14, Sister of Mrs. Resh, Are Recovered From Ruins After Blaze Burns Itself Out.

Four lives were lost last Thursday morning about 7:30 o'clock in the destruction by fire of the home of John Resh, a miner in the employ of the Consolidated Coal Company, at Meyersdale, Pa.. Three Resh children were cremated with Mrs. Resh's sister, Anna Becker, aged 14 years. Mrs. Resh is in a critical condition from internal injury and supposed broken back and is in a Cumberland hospital. She jumped from the second story window. The Resh family is childless as a result of the catastrophe.

The children burned were John, Jr., aged five years; Jordan, aged two years, and a baby four weeks old. When the fire was discovered by neighbors the whole interior of the house was as a burning furnace.

The house was situated on top of the hill at the head of Broadway and being difficult to reach and the water supply poor, the fireman could do practically nothing. The four charred bodies were recovered from the ruins.

Tried to Reach Her Children.

Mr. Resh had left the house at day-break for his work. Shortly afterward the mother sent her five-year old son to the kitchen to kindle a stove fire. After his return upstairs the blaze broke out, unknown to the mother, and the flames enveloped the entire interior with great suddenness. The mother had endeavored to go into the room in which her children and sister had been sleeping, but was prevented in doing so by smoke and fire.

Crazed and horror stricken, Mrs. Resh, who is but 25 years of age, was compelled to jump from a second story window to the ground, after her hand and arm had been seriously burned. Her back was injured in jumping. She was taken to the home of a neighbor where Dr. Glass dressed the burns, after which Mrs. Resh was able to walk about. Blood issued from her nose and mouth, indicating serious internal injuries.

The bodies were taken from the embers after the house had been leveled. They were charred far beyond recognition. The baby was a girl. Miss Becker had been a visitor since the birth of the infant. Mr. Resh is an American. His wife was Miss Anna Becker, of Fort Hill, near Meyersdale. Mr. Resh at one time lived at Jennings, Garrett county, Mrs. Resh, mother of John Resh, and two of his brothers, reside in Meyersdale. The body of the baby girl when found was still wrapped in a badly burned blanket.

THE FARMER DIES LAST

In a fight to death the farmer will die last. If big business thinks it can bleed him without limit it had better consider his resources. When it comes to the pinch he can stand squeezing better than any other class. Food is the first necessity, and he can feed himself. He can raise all that he and his family need, but if he raises more than he needs the rest of the people will starve. The farmer's surplus supplies the world—suppose the surplus fails?

The farmer can raise the material necessary to clothe himself and family—wool, cotton and silk, but if he raises no more the rest of the world will go naked. It is the farmer's surplus material that clothes the world—suppose the surplus fails?

The farmer can, if necessary, produce his own fuel. He can raise his own wood, he can burn corn cobs and even corn if he must, but what will become of the railroads when the farmer neither buys nor sells?

What will become of the packers when they have no meat to pack? And what will become of the grain gamblers when there is no market grain to gamble on? What will become of the stores when the farmers cease to trade? And what will the wholesalers do when the little stores close? And what will the manufacturers do when the wholesalers go out of business? and what will the clerks in the stores, the workers in the mills and the railroad employes do when business stops? And what will the banks do when they can not grow rich loaning the people's money? What will all the people do when nobody needs them? What? Go to work WITH THEIR HANDS and bring a living from Mother Earth—that is the last resort as it was the first.

Will the middlemen continue to lord it over the producer of wealth, or will they learn that they must SERVE if they would live, and serve for a reasonable toll? The flower that blooms in beauty on the stem should not despise the roots that do their work in the dirt. The roots will live when the flower fades—not only live but furnish the sustenance for new flowers, season after season. So with the farmer, he lives near to Nature's breast and Nature will protect her child. He will be last to die in the struggle for existence. But why this conflict? Why not love and brotherhood and cooperation? Why not work together for the common weal? Why not justice to each and all?

W. J. BRYAN.

June 21, the longest day, was also the hottest day of June '21 for the last eleven years. On June 21, 1910, the thermometer registered 92. This June 21, it registered 88.

Seventeen-Pound Trout?

Trout vary greatly within the species, according to the nature of the waters they inhabit, the variations being manifested in their color, size, form and fin development, says the their weight Mr. Hallock, a famous American fisherman, claims to have known of one that weighed seventeen pounds, while as a rule they do not run over three or four pounds.

THE U. S. USCO TREAD

Here is the U. S. Usco Tread, with a long-established standard of service among motorists who have an eye to value, as well as to price. While selling for less than the other tires in the U. S. Fabric line, the Usco has earned a reputation for quality and dependable economy which is not exceeded by any tire in its class.

"Fresh, live U. S. Tires come direct to the dealer from his neighboring Factory Branch."

Which one of your neighbors gets the best mileage out of his tires?

EVERY once in a while you hear a motorist say as he kicks a rear tire with an admiring foot, "there's a lucky tire!" Give him a chance and he'll tell you all about it. And then you'll find that what he calls "luck" is simply his first experience with a quality standard tire.

It all comes to this—buy a U. S. Tire anywhere in this country and you get definite, predictable value for your money no matter what weight car you drive.

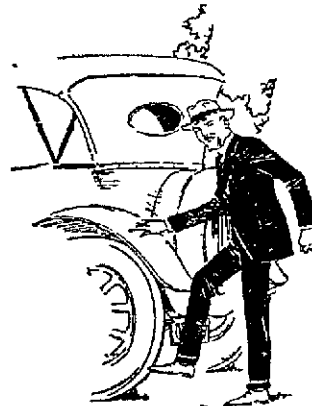

The man who has been guessing his way through "overstocks," "discontinued lines," "job lots" and the like, will find it refreshing to talk with the local U. S. Tire dealer who is concentrating on a full, completely sized line of U. S. Tires.

For the first time he will hear some straight quality tire facts—and get the difference between chance and certainty in tire buying.

The U. S. Tires he sees in stock are fresh, live tires. They come direct to the dealer from his neighboring Factory Branch.

There are 92 of these Branches established and maintained by the U. S. Tire makers.

Giving your dealer a continuous moving stock of new, fresh tires built on the certainty of quality first every time

American Shrub Appreciated.

One American shrub which has been received with great appreciation in England, and which grows well there, is the gorgeous flame azalea, called by the botanists azalea calendulaceum. This plant was sent to Europe many years ago, and perhaps is not grown so widely now as it has been in the past, owing to the great influx of rhododendron varieties.

SUCCESSFUL SQUAB RAISING

Birds Must Be Kept Free From Disease and Insect Parasites—Keep House Clean.

There is very little chance of making money from squabs, unless the pigeons can be kept comparatively free from disease and insect parasites, pigeon specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture point out. If healthy breeding stock is obtained, the houses and yards kept clean, and careful attention given to the birds, diseases and parasites should not be a troublesome factor in squab raising.

The stock should be carefully watched and any sick birds removed from the breeding pens. The house should be kept dry, clean, well ventilated, and free from drafts. Have the floor covered with 1 inch of fine gravel and rake off frequently the manure which collects on the top. Keep the yards clean either by scraping the surface and adding fresh sand or gravel, or by digging over the land and, if possible, planting it to grain.

The nests, nest boxes, and pens should be kept clean, but it is not advisable to disturb more than necessary the nests that contain eggs or squabs. Spray the pens frequently with white-wash containing a little crude carbolic acid, or with a coal-tar disinfectant; examine the birds for feather lice, which are troublesome, especially in hot weather. Birds having many lice should be treated with sodium fluoride, either dusting by the pinch method or dipping in a solution, the latter method being preferable. The nests or nest pans should be cleaned out and the nesting material removed whenever dirty, care being taken not to disturb the squabs any more than is absolutely necessary.

EXERCISE QUITE IMPORTANT

Close Confinement During Winter Months Is Not Conducive to Profitable Results.

During the spring season fowls having free range get abundant exercise, but during the cold months many hens suffer from lack of exercise. Close confinement without exercise is not conducive to getting the best results from a flock, although the feed provided may be the best, for idle hens soon grow too fat to lay. It is almost impossible to give laying hens that are confined too much exercise.

The fowls may be encouraged to exercise in various ways, such as suspending cabbage heads, beets, etc., so that the birds have to jump for them, and scattering grain in the litter. The litter should be from four to eight inches deep and may consist of straw (either cut or whole), hay, leaves, buckwheat hulls, shredded corn fodder, or any like convenient material. The hens should be kept hungry enough so that they will work diligently all day for the corn scattered in this litter, say poultry specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. Whenever the litter becomes damp or soiled it must be removed and fresh put in.

GREEN FEEDS FOR CHICKENS

Sprouted Oats, Alfalfa Meal, Chopped Alfalfa, Clover Hay and Beets Are Recommended.

Good kinds of green feeds for hens in winter, recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture, are sprouted oats, alfalfa meal, chopped alfalfa and clover hay, cabbages and mangel beets. Cabbages may be hung up in the poultry house; the beets are usually split and stuck on a nail on the side wall of the pen about a foot above the floor to keep the feed clean. Keep oyster shells, grit, charcoal, and plenty of clean drinking water before the hens all the time.

PULLETS MAKE BEST LAYERS

Feeding Stimulants or Highly Concentrated Food Is Most Injurious Practice.

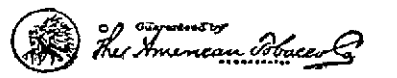

When pullets are forced to lay early, by stimulants or highly concentrated food, it is an injury, as it taxes their vitality. A pullet that is forced will lay very small eggs for a while, and when she ceases, in order to rest she will not begin again as soon as an ordinary hen. She becomes prematurely old, and, on the average, does not prove as profitable as when she is given time to mature before beginning to lay.

STARTLING STATEMENTS OF INTEREST TO EVERY FARMER

A. C. Palmer, one of the leading dairymen of Indiana, in an article in a recent issue of Hoard's Dairyman said:

"I believe the fault of pasturing all summer without ample feeding is one of the greatest sins of the dairyman and the thing more than all others responsible for decreased milk and butyric acid production. I speak from an experience of my own."

"Nine-tenths of the dairyman are a failure in that their cows are underfed, and so small percentages have cows on their farms that are actually starving."

"In 1917 I lost this year to an ignorance of food properties and values, as, for instance, a feeding of corn fodder, or corn silage even, and brain makes a balanced ration."

"What is grass anyway? What sort of a magic food is it that it should be considered a perfect feed for dairy cows? The answer is that grass is practically hay with water in it, and what farmer that even pretends to keep cows would think of feeding his stock on moist hay all winter? And that is all the feed the poor cow usually gets throughout the summer."

"I have heard the argument raised that since grass is the natural food for cows, then, when there is plenty of it, that is all she needs. The answer is that since the production of milk in larger quantity than is necessary for her young is an unnatural function of the cow, unnatural methods must be resorted to produce it. Green feeds will furnish the nutrition for a cow's body maintenance, and its appetizing and stimulating qualities will encourage milk production. But all too often the stimulating quality recedes, and by encouraging greater milk production when she does not receive a greater supply of food, her body makes up the difference, so that by the end of grass season her body is weaker than in the spring. Then the dairyman must build her up during the winter months and receive a greatly reduced milk flow while doing so."

"In 1917 I fed my cows until June 10, and like my neighbors, gave them pasture alone until September 15, when their steadily decreasing milk flow made me hurry feed them. But even so, the damage was done, and the decrease continued until time to dry them. The next year I continued the same feed throughout the summer, and the same cows, having calved at nearly the same time last year, are now giving more milk than they did the year before. Some credit must be given to the improved pasturing conditions this year, but to my mind the biggest reason is the extra feed of the summer is now giving results. And this extra 40 per cent is more than making good the feed the cows ate."

"Feed smart in quantity is no worse than feed short in quality. The man who thinks he can winter a herd of dairy cows on a ration of corn fodder or any such thing is lacking in the knowledge necessary for his success. This is a business that calls for brains and study as much as any business a man may enter. The problem of percentage of protein, carbohydrates, and fat needed to produce a certain quantity of milk in a cow of a determined weight must be solved if the dairyman is to produce milk at a profit."

"One can't start today with even a perfect ration and expect a big increase next week, or next month. Many cows are run-down; they have been underfed and their systems are deranged. It takes time to get them straightened out and nature working right. It takes from six months to a year to notice the real results that will come from proper feeding of a cow that has been under-nourished for years. These things can't be done in days."

And again pointing to the onerous mistake made by dairymen Mr. Palmer says: "And strange though it sounds, it is a fact that the greater part of the under-feeding on the part of the farmer with pasture comes during the summer months."

ROUND KNOB

A very heavy storm passed through our section last Friday.

Fred Foster has been confined to his bed for the past few days with pneumonia, but we hope for his speedy recovery.

Mrs. Albert S. Figard is in Altoona this week visiting her sister, Mrs. Francis Riley.

Mrs. Silas Thomas visited at the home of Mrs. Wade H. Figard on Friday.

Preaching at Round Knob on Sunday last was very largely attended. Rev. Speace delivered a very interesting sermon on the text "Who am I?"

Mrs. Raymond Figard and two daughters, Ruth and Jennet, visited at the home of Albert S. Figard on Sunday last.

Mrs. Hockins is keeping house for Mrs. Albert S. Figard this week during her absence.

Wade H. Figard was at Hopewell on Wednesday transacting legal business.

Edgar Stinson and wife visited at the home of Albert Swindts on Sunday last.

John Wright, of Sherman's Valley visited at the home of Wade H. Figard on Sunday last.

Wade H. Figard, wife and daughter, Amelia, H. Charley Thomas and C. C. Foster visited at the home of Cook Foster Sunday.

Blair Mort spent Saturday and Sunday visiting his mother.

FIRE TOWERS INSTALLED

Harrisburg, Pa., June 21.—Two of the fifty steel fire towers that will be erected by the Pennsylvania Department of Forestry this summer probably will be placed in the Buchanan State Forest which is supervised by District Forester Byers, of Everett. It is proposed to put one of the towers on the summit of the Tuscarora mountains, at an elevation of 2,440 feet above sea level. From this point, a forest fire observer will be able to detect fires as far as Shireleysburg to the north, the South, mountains to the east. The hills of Maryland southward, and west to Sideling Hill mountain.

On the top of Martin Hill, 3,096 feet high, another tower will enable the observer to locate forest fires in the territory bounded by the northern section of Bedford county. Sideling Hill mountain, northern Maryland, and the Allegheny mountains.

Forester Byers has invited the Boy Scout troops of Everett, Bedford and McConnellsburg to camp in the Buchanan State Forest this summer. He has renovated the cabin and summer grounds in the Bedford Division in preparation for the Scouts. The Waynesboro troop is now camping in Allen Valley.

A surveying crew of the United States Geological Survey, is working in Allen Valley north of the Buchanan State Forest.

During the spring fire season, 41 forest fires burned in Forester Byers' district. It is estimated that the total area burned over about 5,227 acres. In Bedford county, there were reported 29, fires in Franklin county 4 fires, in Fulton county, 6 fires, and in Huntingdon 2 fires. Two persons hunting for some of the fires have been compelled to pay the costs of putting them out.

OF INTEREST TO MR. HARDING.

Mr. Harding wishes to call attention to the fact that the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada have dwelt side by side and settled their controversies without resort of super-power but by the exercise of the sovereignty of free peoples with one another.

The President has "super-power" on the brain, as they would say in Marion; but quite apart from any inferences that may be drawn from his speech, we are disposed to congratulate him on his discovery of the fact that the United States and Canada have been at peace for more than a hundred years, and we invite him to consider some of the practical aspects of that peace as to certain questions now before the Administration.

During a period of 106 years in which that peace has been in force neither the United States nor Great Britain has maintained a warship on the Great Lakes or a fort along 3,000 miles of frontier. By mutual agreement they disarmed the international boundary, saving themselves enormous sums of money and removing one of the most insidious temptations to war. Both nations sacrificed part of their "sovereignty" when they entered into that compact, and neither has missed any of the sovereignty that it sacrificed.

If Mr. Harding would devote a little thought to the century of peace between the United States and Canada it might enlighten him in regard to certain international problems about which he shows a lame and halting understanding.

TIN CANS AS FUEL;
BURN IN FURNACE

It might be left to the expert metal purgist to say whether or not there is any material quantity of heat evolved in the burning of tin cans, and if so just what their "fuel value" is, says the Scientific American. As an efficient and sanitary means for disposing of them there can be no question regarding their cremation.

That almost any quantity of tin cans can be conveniently disposed of by burning in an ordinary hot air or steam house-heating furnace cannot be generally known to householders at large or there would be fewer back yards, vacant lots and dumps cluttered up with this unsightly and insubstantial kind of refuse. As usually thrown out without the formality of rinsing, they are "smelly," and where they not infrequently lodge they collect rain water and become most luxuriant breeding places for flies and mosquitos. All this could be readily avoided by simply "firing" the cans into the furnace along with the other fuel. The burning of a tin can, as any other combustible, is a process of oxidation. Oxidation takes place slowly in the space above the fuel bed, because then if the fire is intelligently handled and there is a minimum of "air dilution" there will be no great amount of free oxygen. As the cans are allowed to sink deeper and deeper into the fuel bed, and, finally, into the underlying beds of ashes, they encounter more and more free oxygen which, at a comparative high temperature, soon results in their almost complete disappearance.

In order that they may be got rid of as quickly as possible, it is best to put them into the furnace before burning fresh coal. They should not be "poked" (neither should burning coal for that matter, except in very rare incidents), but left alone to sink gradually down to, and finally through, the grates, in which there will be nothing left of them but a few scattered fragments of brittle oxide. It may be remarked that practically all other refuse from the house can be disposed of in the same way.

FISHERTOWN

Mrs. A. E. Blackburn, son and daughter, of Philadelphia, are visiting at the home of Uriah Blackburn.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Wolfe and Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hoover were Johnson visitors on Sunday.

Mrs. Kinkade and grand-daughter of Everett, are visiting friends here this week.

Mrs. E. B. Miller, Miss Rebecca Blackburn, Mrs. Elias Blackburn and Misses Minnie Bassett and Nellie Thomas attended the W. C. T. U. Convention in Bedford last week.

Mr. and Mrs. F. F. Hoover and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hoover attended the Hoover reunion at Lakemont Park Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Blattenberger, of Windber, Mr. and Mrs. Walters, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Blattenberger and Joseph Miller of Roaring Springs, were visitors at the home of Fred Blattenberger on Sunday.

The Grangers of this place held the first regular meeting in their new hall on Thursday evening.

Welcome.

"With the exception of a little milk toast, which comprised my diet for more than eight weeks, I could not eat anything," said Capt. Geo. W. Womble, residing at 105 Jennings St., Knoxville, Tenn., a highly respected citizen of that city.

"I am now able," continued Captain Womble, "after taking two bottles of Laxative, to eat practically anything. I had a bad form of stomach and intestinal trouble for a long time and for months my condition had been such that I suffered agony. I got so I could not eat the simplest food. I tried doctor after doctor and all kinds of medicine but nothing that was prescribed for me seemed to do me any good. I had a terrible pain in my breast just over my heart and for weeks and weeks I got no relief."

"I finally got so nervous that I actually dreaded to see night come as I could not sleep and was always too restless that I would rejoice to see daylight come. I was also constipated all of the time. In fact, I seemed a burden and I was so miserable that I was almost on the verge of despair. Several of my neighbors told me about Tanlac and advised me to try it."

"I am personally acquainted with Mr. Dan M. Chambliss, of the firm of Kuhlman & Chambliss, and when I told him of my condition and how I suffered he advised me to begin taking Tanlac without delay and that it had relieved hundreds of the best people in Knoxville. I have now taken two bottles of Tanlac and am giving you this testimonial in the hope that it may induce others to take it. Since taking this medicine I actually feel like I had been made all over again with the youth, energy and ambition of a sixteen year old boy."

POINT

Misses Florence and Blanche Hille-gass, of Juniata township, spent several days last week with their sister's family, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gohn.

Mrs. Hurd and four children, of Johnstown, are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Shaffer.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hissong and daughters, Ruth and Anna, of Windber, and Mr. W. M. Hissong and daughter, Margaret, of Cessna, were pleasant Sunday guests of your correspondent's family. The boys came to see their mother who slipped last Monday and gave her right knee a bad twist, which was very painful and incapacitated her for walking or doing any work, so that she had to have her assistance even with a cane. Now she is glad to report that she is much better and can get along pretty well with her cane without other help.

Mrs. G. C. Claycomb, of Cessna, spent Tuesday with her mother, Mrs. K. C. Smith.

Mr. W. C. Harrison and family, of Nanty-Glo, Cambria Co., John and Harry Zimmerman, Shade, Somerset Co., and two Weaver brothers, of Hillsboro, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gohn on Sunday, and Sunday evening they entertained Mr. and Mrs. Peter A. Shaffer, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Miller, Mr. Avery Miller, Misses Ada Shaffer and Lou Amick, and Mrs. Maude Dibert.

Mr. Albert Gohn has four carpenters at work framing his barn which will very soon be ready to raise. Mr. Ezra Gohn, of Lambertsville is the contractor.

The 29th Annual re-union of the 55th Pa. Regt. Association will be held in Indiana, Pa., on July 12th. The outlook for a good time is good at the present time.

SPRING HOPE

Samuel Oldiegle, of Windber, was calling on old friends here on Saturday.

William Jordan, wife and daughter, of Calmarbrook, spent the week-end with relatives here.

George Winegardner, who is employed at Calmarbrook, visited his family Saturday and Sunday.

George Croyle, of near Cessna, who has been working for William D. Hoover, was very badly injured last week one day by Mr. Hoover's Holstein bull which became enraged. It required two men to get the animal away from him. Mr. Croyle's condition is improved at this time.

Harry McClellan and wife, of Hollidaysburg, were guests of H. L. Hull's on Saturday night and Sunday. On Sunday they all took their lunch and went to the top of the mountain on the Lincoln Highway.

Harry Hershberger, wife and two sons, of Johnstown, spent a day last week with their cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Hershberger.

Soil Treatment For Better Quality of Food

Nation's Best Dairy Cattle Graze on Soil Containing Liberal Proportion of Lime; and the Nation's Children of Tender Years Depend Mainly Upon Good Milk

UNCLE SAM'S soil doctors are finding new ways to prolong human and animal life. Their aim now is to bring about the more extensive use of soil ingredients that will afford a maximum of life-giving properties. Scientific proof that lime mixed in the soil not only results in more abundant agriculture, but more healthful products has evoked warm support from Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and his corps of experts. Bulletins urging the more general use of lime in soil treatment, are being spread broadcast by the Government. Department officials in their studies are convinced that lime is needed by animals as well as by plants.

When their attention was drawn to the great mortality among animals of all classes last year from disease and exposure, it was their conclusion that pasture upon which animals grazed, because of lack in nourishment, may have contributed greatly to this death rate. Officials of the Department declared that lime is essential to the full growth and healthful pastures for animals. Lime, they said, improves the quality and variety of grasses and clovers. Not only are the grasses and clovers more abundant on lime treated soil, but they are grown in greater profusion.

The best dairy cattle in the world

It was asserted, therefore, to be of the highest importance to the health of the people that the great agricultural producing interests of the Nation employ larger quantities of lime upon their lands. It was further said that most farmers look beyond their own horizon and the interest and welfare of their communities at heart, and of their neighbors beyond their own borders. In the improvement of the yielding power of soil and of the quality of crops, agricultural officials have found that the farmer is not slow to adopt new methods of soil treatment when they will raise the standard of his own products, in contribution to the greater health of the people.

LESSON FOR JUNE 26

REVIEW: THE SOCIAL TASK OF
THE CHURCH.GOLDEN TEXT—He shall dwell with them, and they shall be his people.—Rev.
21:3.DEVOTIONAL READING—Rev. 21:1-14.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Way Jesus
Wants Us to Live.JUNIOR TOPIC—Some Things Jesus
Wants Us to Do.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC
—The Challenge to Boys and Girls.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC
—The Challenge to the Church.

Revelation 21:1-14 is the passage of Scripture selected for devotional reading. Instead of attempting to review the lessons of the quarter it would be of great interest and profit to enter into a detailed study of this Scripture. The following outline may be helpful. I. The New Heaven and the New Earth (vv. 1, 2); II. The New People (vv. 3-8); III. The New Jerusalem (vv. 9-14).

Another way would be to assign the Golden Texts to different members of the class asking them to give the part of the particular lesson which illustrates the teachings of the text.

Still another way would be to summarize the different Scripture passages, giving the leading lessons of each. The following is given by way of suggestion:

I. The believer's supreme obligation is to present himself as a living sacrifice to God. The grand reason for so doing is that he has received the mercies of God. The one so yielded will love his fellow believer sincerely.

II. The believer's body is God's property—the temple of the Holy Ghost; therefore we are under solemn obligation to use it for His glory.

III. Since God the Father and Jesus Christ work, it is incumbent upon all to work, and the man who will not work should not eat.

IV. God hates the greed that moves men to dishonest methods in order to get rich. His judgment shall fall upon such.

V. True education will lead one to Christ. The one only book which tells about Him is the Bible. No one can call himself educated who is ignorant of the Bible.

VI. God rested when His work of creation was done. On this basis He has established the law of labor and rest. The obligation to cease from labor is that one may remember God.

VII. The church is an organism as the human body. In order that there may be real helpful co-operation there must be membership in that body.

VIII. Jesus should be welcomed as a guest into every home. He is an example of an obedient son in the home.

IX. The most important question is not "Who is my neighbor?" but "To whom can I be a neighbor?" Being a neighbor is seeing those about who need help and rendering such help in loving sympathy.

X. The Christian is a citizen as well as a church member. Intelligent Christians will show proper loyalty to the state.

XI. When Christ shall reign as King there shall be peace all over the world between animals and men. The supreme business of the believer in this dispensation is to preach the gospel to all the world as a witness.

XII. Jesus came and preached the gospel to the poor, but shall come again to judge the world and reign as King.

Since the whole of man's duty is summed up by Christ in duty to God and duty to man (Matt. 22:36-40), it would be profitable to go through the quarter's lesson and set down the teachings under

I. Duties to God; II. Duties to Man.

House Divided Against Itself.

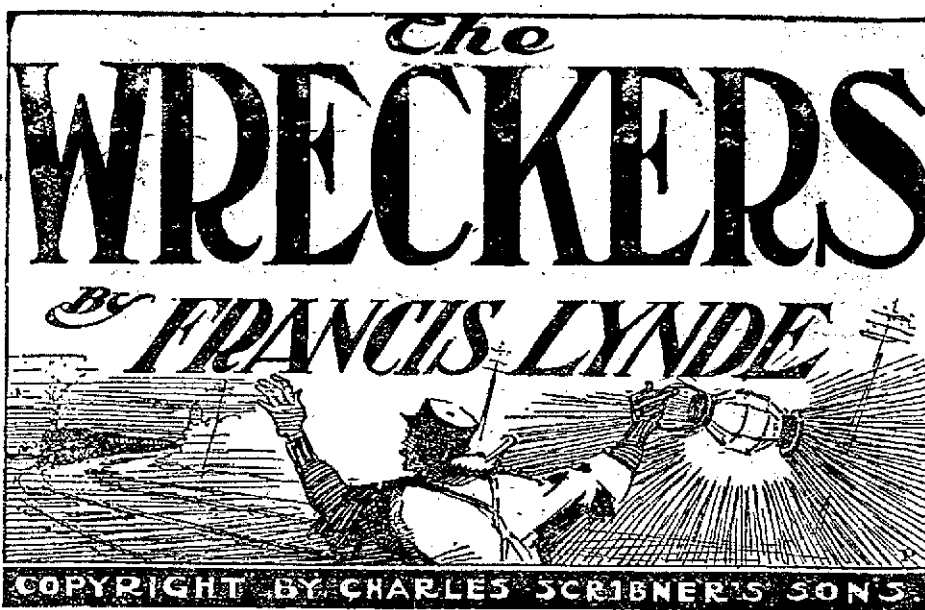

He who sits above the waterfalls is still working out His ways, and man's extremity is, as ever, God's opportunity. But if we are to be real sharers in this task of divine reconstruction, and fulfilling of God's purposes for the human family, it behooves us to do our utmost by prayer and effort to repair the breaches which human waywardness has wrought in that instrument which He has designed, and through which He has chosen especially to work out humanity's salvation—the church of the living God, the One, Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Body of Christ. For until these wounds are healed the church must present herself as a house divided against itself; and, because the Savior's prayer for a unity in the "one fold" remains unfulfilled, His enemies continue to triumph, and the forces which make for righteousness are thwarted.—Bishop Howden.

Blessed Mysteries of Life.

Both death and sleep are blessed mysteries of life. It is of little consequence what time the angel of life opens the door of death for us; the supreme concern for us is whether our hearts shall be pure, and our souls strong in grace to rejoice in the vision of the Everlasting Day.—Newman Smyth.

Jesus' First Preaching.

Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand.—Matthew 4:17.

Chapter IX

low at the capital thinks about it, and where you'll stand in the coming election if you don't put out this fire that Norcross is kindling. You're yellow, Clananhan. That's all that is the matter with you."

"Tell me wan thing!" insisted the divekeeper, boring the chief grafter with his pin-point eyes. "Do you stand for it if we do this thing up right?"

Hatch's eyes fell, and Henckel's big body twisted uneasily in the chair that was growling under his beer-barrel weight. There was silence for a little space, and I could feel the cold sweat starting out all over me. I hadn't dreamed of stumbling upon anything like this when I started out to shadow Kestler. They were actually plotting to murder the boss!

It was Hatch who broke the stillness.

"It's up to you, Clananhan, and you know it," he declared. "You've had your tip from the big fellow. The railroad people must be made to get into the fight in the coming election, and get in on the right side. If they don't, and if Norcross stays and keeps his fire burning, you fellows lose out."

Clananhan sat back in his chair and shoved his hands into his pockets.

"Ye'd shring me as if I was a boy!" he scoffed. "Tis your own game fr'm first to last. D'ye think I'm not knowing that? Tis bread and butter and th' big rake-off for you, and little ye care how th' election goes. Suppose we'd cawk this man in th' hot par-rat av th' p'litcal fight; what happens? Half th' noospayers in th' state 'd play him up fr a martyr to th' cause av good government, and we'd all go to hell in a hand-basket!"

I was cramped and sore and one of my legs had gone to sleep, but I couldn't have moved if I had wanted to. My heart was skipping beats right along while I waited for Hatch's answer. When it came, the drumming in my ears pretty nearly made me lose it.

"Clananhan," he began, as cold as an icicle. "I didn't get you down here to argue with you. You've bungled this thing once, and for that reason you've got it to do over again. We haven't asked you to 'cawk' anybody, as you put it, and we are not asking it now."

"Tis d—d little you lack av asking it," retorted the divekeeper.

"Listen," said Hatch, leaning forward with his hands on his knees. "Besides keeping cases on Norcross here, we've been digging back into his record a few lines. Every man has his sore spot, if you can only find it, Clananhan—just as you have yours. What if I should tell you that Norcross is wanted in another state—for a crime? Before he came here he was chief of construction on the Oregon Midland. There was a right-of-way fight back in the mountains—fifty miles from the nearest sheriff—with the P. & S. F. Norcross armed his track-layers, and in the bluffing there was a man killed."

Though it was a warm night, as I have said, the cold chills began to chase themselves up and down my back. What Hatch said was perfectly true. In the right-of-way scrap he was talking about, there had been a few wild shots fired, and one of them had found a P. & S. F. grade laborer. I don't believe anybody had ever really blamed the boss for it. But there had been a man killed.

While I was shivering, Clananhan said: "Well, what av it?"

"Norcross was responsible for that man's death. If he was having trouble over his right-of-way, his recourse was to the law, and he took the law into his own hands. Nothing was ever done about it, because nobody took the trouble to prosecute. A week ago we sent a man to Oregon to look up the facts. He succeeded in finding a brother of the dead man, and a warrant has now been sworn out for Norcross' arrest."

"Well!" said Clananhan again. "Ye have the shring in yer own hand; why don't ye pull it?"

"That's where you come in," was the answer. "The Oregon justice issued the warrant because it was demanded, but he refused to incur, for his county, the expense of sending a deputy sheriff to another state, or to take the necessary steps to have Norcross extradited. If Norcross could be produced in court, he would try him and either discharge him or bind him over, as the facts might warrant. He took his stand upon the ground that Norcross was only technically responsible, and told the brother that in all probability nothing would come of an attempt to prosecute."

"Thin ye've got nothing on him, after all," the Irishman grunted.

"Yes," Hatch came back; "we have the warrant, and, in addition to that, we have you, Pete. A word from you to the Port City police headquarters, and our man finds himself arrested and locked up—to wait for a requisition from the governor of Oregon."

"But you said th' requisition wouldn't come," Clananhan put in.

Hatch was sitting back now and stroking his ugly jaw.

"It might come, Pete, if it had to; there's no knowing. In the meantime we get delay. There'll be habeas corpus proceedings, of course, to get him out of jail, but there's where you'll come in again; you've got your own man for city attorney. And, after all, the delay is all we need. With Norcross in trouble, and in jail on a charge of murder, the railroad ship'll go on the rocks in short order. The Norcross management is having plenty of trouble—wrecks and the like. With Norcross locked up, New York will be heard from, and Dismuke will step in and clean house. That will wind up the reform spasm."

"Tis a small chance," growled the chief of the ward beavers. "I'll talk it over with the big fellow." Again Hatch leaned forward and put his hands on his knees.

"You'll do nothing of the sort, Pete. You'll act, and act on your own responsibility. If you don't, somebody may wire the sheriff of Silver Bow county, Montana, that the man he knew in Butte as Michael Clancy is—"

The divekeeper put up both hands as if to ward off a blow.

"Tis enough," he mumbled, speaking as if he had a bunch of dry cotton in his mouth. "Slip me th' warrant."

Hatch went to the safe and worked the combination. When the door was opened he passed a folded paper to Clananhan. Through all this talk, Henckel had said nothing, and I suspected that Hatch had him there solely for safety's sake, and to provide a witness. With the paper in his pocket, Clananhan got up to go. It was time for me to make a move.

It's curious how an idea will sometimes lay hold of you and knock out reason and common sense and everything else. Clananhan had in his pocket a piece of paper that simply meant ruin to Mr. Norcross, and the blowing up of all the plans that had been made and all the work that had been done. If he should be allowed to get up town with that warrant, the end of everything would be in sight. But how was I to prevent it?

The three men were on their feet, and Hatch was reaching for the wall switch which controlled the single incandescent lamp hanging from the ceiling of the scale-house. If I could only think of some way to blow the place up and snatch the paper in the confusion.

Up to that minute I had never thought once of the pistol I had taken from Fred May's drawer, though it was still sagging in my left hip pocket. When I did think of it I dragged it out with some silly notion of trying to hold the three men up at the door of the shack as they came out. Hatch's stop to light a cigar and to hand out a couple to the other two gave me time to chuck that notion and grab another. With the muzzle of the automatic resting in the crack of the opened window I took dead aim at the incandescent lamp in the ceiling and turned her loose for the whole magazineful.

Since the first bullet got the lamp and left the place black dark, I couldn't see what was happening in the close little room. I could hear them gasping and yelling and knocking one another down as they fought to get the door open. Sticking the empty pistol back into my pocket I jumped to get action, hurrying my sore hand like the mischief in doing it.

Hatch was the first man out, but the big German was so close a second that he knocked his smaller partner down and fell over him. Clananhan kept his feet. He had a gun in his hand that looked to me, in the darkness, as big as a cannon. I was flattened against the side of the scale shack, and when the divekeeper tried to side-step around the two fallen men who were blocking the way, I snatched the folded paper from his pocket; snatched it and ran as if the dickens was after me.

That was a bad move—the runaway. If I had kept still there might have been a chance for me to make a sneak. But when I ran, and fell over a pile of loose coal and got up and ran again, they were all three after me, Clananhan taking blind shots in the dark with his cannon as he came.

Naturally, I made straight for the wagon gate, and forgot, until I was right there, that it and the wicket through one of the leaves, were both locked. As I shook the wicket, a bullet from Clananhan's gun spat into the woodwork and stuck a splinter into my hand, and I turned and sprinted again, this time for the gates where the coal cars were pushed in from the railroad yard. These, too, were shut and locked, and when I ducked under the nearest gondola I realized that I was trapped. Before I could climb the high fence anywhere, they'd get me.

They came up, all three of them, puffing and blowing, while I was hiding under the gondola.

"It's probably that cow-boy spotter of Norcross', but he can't get away," Hatch was gritting—meaning Tarbell, probably. "The gates are locked and we can plug him if he tries to climb the fence. There's a gun in the scale-house. You two look under these cars while I go and get it!"

It was up to me to move again. Henckel was striking matches and holding them so that Clananhan could look under the cars, and I could feel, in anticipation, the shock of a bullet from the big gun in the divekeeper's fat fist as I crawled cautiously out on the far side. Creeping along behind the string of coal cars I came presently to the great gantry crane used for unloading the fuel. It was a huge travelling machine, straddling the tracks and a good part of the yard, and the clam-shell grab-bucket was down, resting on its two lips on the ground.

At first I thought of climbing to the frame-work of the crane and trying to hide on the big bridge beam. Then I saw that the two halves of the clam-shell bucket were slightly open, just wide enough to let me squeeze in. If they were looking for a full-sized man—Tarbell, for instance, who was as husky as a farm-hand—they'd never think of that crack in the bucket; and in another second I had wriggled through the V-shaped opening and was sitting humped up in one of the halves of the clam-shell.

That was a mighty good guess. When Hatch came back with his gun, they combed that coal yard with a fine-tooth comb, using a lantern that Hatch had gotten from somewhere and missing no hole or corner where a man might hide, save add excepting only the one I had pre-empted.

As it happened, the search wound up finally under the crane, with the three standing so near that I could have reached out of the crack between the bucket halves and touched them.

"Der tuffel has gone mit himself offer der fence, yes?" puffed Henckel. And then: "Vot for iss he shoot off dem pistols, ennahow?"

Clananhan confessed, I suppose because he knew he would have to, sooner or later.

"It was a hold-up," he growled. "Th' warrant's gone out av my pocket."

Hatch's comment on this was fairly blood-curdling in its profanity.

"Then it's up to you to get him some other way, you blundering son of a thief!" he raged. "I don't care what you do, but if you don't make this country too hot to hold him, it's going to get too hot to hold you!" And what more he was going to say, I don't know, for at that moment a belated police patrol began pounding at the gates on the town side and wanting to know what all the shooting was about.

It was after they had all gone away, leaving the big coal yard in silence and darkness, that I got mine, good and hard. Sitting all bunched up in the grab-bucket and waiting for my chance to climb out and make a getaway, the common sense reaction came and saw what I had done. With the best intentions in the world, in trying to kill off the chance offered to the enemy by the Oregon warrant and the trumped-up charge of murder, I had merely saved the boss an arrest and a possible legal tangle and had put him in peril of his life.

CHAPTER X

The Man at the Window

Of course, the first thing I did, the morning after that adventure in the coal yard, was to tell the boss all about it, and I was just forty enough to do it when Mr. Ripley was present. Mr. Norcross didn't say much; and, for that matter, neither did the lawyer, though he did ask the boss a question or two about the real facts in the Midland right-of-way squabble. But I noticed, after that, that our man Tarbell was continually turning up at all sorts of times, and in all sorts of odd places, so I took it that Ripley had given him his tip, and that he was sort of body-guarding Mr. Norcross on the quiet, though I am sure the boss didn't know anything about that part of it—he was such a square fighter himself that he probably wouldn't have stood for it if he had.

Meanwhile, things grey warmer and warmer in the tussle we were making to pull the old Short Line out of the mud; warmer in a number of ways, because, in addition to the fight for the public confidence, we began just then to have a perfect epidemic of wrecks.

The boss turned the material trouble over to Mr. Van Britt and devoted himself pretty strictly to the public side of things. Everywhere, and on every occasion—at dinners at the different chambers of commerce, and public banquets given to this, that, or the other visiting big-wig—he was always ready to get on his feet and tell the people that the true prosperity of the country carried with it the prosperity of the railroads; that the two things were one and inseparable; and

HARDING SPEAKS NATION'S DESIRE

ALL THE PEOPLE OF THE COUNTRY SAY WITH HIM THAT WAR "MUST NOT BE AGAIN."

DISARMING SOMETHING ELSE

Insistent Propaganda to Persuade America to Lay Down all Weapons, Whatever Other Nations Do, Doesn't Persuade Most Congressmen.

By EDWARD B. CLARK.
Washington.—With the war in his mind, President Harding when in New York City, as he placed a wreath on the casket of the first American soldier to die on German soil, said: "It must not be again."

All through the country this expression of the President has been recognized as a simple but most striking phrase, expressing as it does the desire of all the people of the country. The speech on the pier at Hoboken, N. J., of which "It must not be again" was the keynote, has called particularly sharp attention in Washington to the propaganda for disarmament. Congress today is, or recently has been, confronted with several legislative propositions which bear directly on disarmament, and of course there is also before the law makers the resolution which asks that a conference on disarmament be held between representatives of Great Britain, Japan and the United States.

In Congress and in the country today an old fight to a certain extent is being waged once more. All over the United States there were pleas for disarmament long before the United States entered the great war, and in fact long before any other nation had entered it. There were attempts constantly to induce congress to cut down the armed forces of the country and with these attempts there were others to prevent military exercises in the schools of the country, and more strongly to prevent the establishment of training camps for the youth.

Would Disarm and Be Trustful.

Today congress is being urged with the same insistence as before the war to take measures which will disarm this country while other countries still carry arms. The present administration is opposed to anything of this kind and congress knows it, but there is a strong minority in each legislative house which seemingly believes that the United States can throw away every weapon that it has and remain perfectly placid in the feeling that even though all the other nations of the world are armed, and some of them still ambitious, no harm can come to the United States.

The line-up in congress on matters pertaining to what may be called in a general way preparedness, is just about the same kind of a line-up that was in evidence in the years 1914, '15, '16 and in the early part of '17. It is only the truth to say that there was not one hard student of the trend of affairs in the past who was not convinced in these years that the United States eventually must enter the great war.

It can be said that the majority of the members of both houses of congress in the years named believed that before long the United States would be compelled to get into the conflict. It was known in Washington that many of the representatives of the people in either house held back from support of anything which looked like preparation for trouble, not because they believed there was to be no trouble, but because their constituents, or a majority of them, would not admit for one minute, no matter what their senses told them, that war was to come.

What Wilful Blindness Cost.

It is a terrible thing today to hear some of the things which were said concerning the cost to the United States of the indifference to the looming cloud of trouble in the three years prior to April, 1917. It is said freely in military and naval circles that the disinclination to face the truth of what was to come cost the United States the lives of very many thousands of men who otherwise today would be alive and well, and added fully fifty per cent to the lists of the sick and injured who are pleading to a forgetful people for that remembrance which seemingly should be due to men who sacrifice themselves for others.

All of this is of the past. It has taught its lesson in part. There is not much question but that eventually the great countries of the world will get together and enforce a reduction of armaments, and will take means to provide against future wars between civilized peoples. The question now, however, has to do with today, a time prior to the agreement time when the nations shall write their disarmament rules and follow them to the proper end.

There was no party division to any marked degree when the senate the other day voted down an amendment which would have decreased the personnel of the United States navy. There seems to be a majority feeling in congress that the United States cannot today go to an extreme of disarmament while other nations still maintain, perhaps not an extreme of armament but something approaching it.

Memorial day services for the dead

In many wars this year were marked perhaps not by an unusual solemnity, but certainly by a seemingly larger appreciation of America's duty to its dead.

Within a few days there reached the United States the bodies of over 5,000 American soldiers who obeyed the last call in France while serving their country and a sister republic in the hour of need. Many of these bodies have been brought to Washington for interment in the great national cemetery at Arlington.

Everywhere in Washington at this present time there is in evidence the red poppy of Europe. It is the poppy of Flanders field, the poppy of the valleys of the Marne and the Moselle, and of the fields bordering the stretches of the Meuse and the forests of the Argonne.

It seems to me that this flower, which has been adopted as the Memorial Day flower by the American Legion, deserves of itself some special consideration. It was remarkable how the blood-red poppy of France took hold of the imagination of the American soldiers. For centuries in France it has been regarded in a sense as the war flower, or perhaps rather as the flower of war's aftermath. Its color likewise has been significant of sacrifice, and as it grows abundantly on virtually all the battlefields of France, and the whole country at one time or another has been a battlefield, it has come to be looked upon as at once a companion and a memorial to the dead heroes of the land.

I have found that many Americans believe that the red poppy of France, which blows also in Flanders fields, is essentially a spring blossom. It is true that the poppy is more abundant in the spring than at other seasons of the year, but from April until November here and there through the fields, the red poppy always may be seen. I have seen it in profusion growing in the fields between the lines of the French and the German armies, in the foot hills of the Vosges, in late April and in early May. I have seen it nodding with the passing winds in the fields of the advanced zone north of the Marne in the months of September, October and November.

The French soldiers look on the poppy as a symbolic flower. They have an extreme sympathy with it and their feeling toward the blossom quickly extended itself to the ranks of the American armies. The blossoms of this plant which has been the theme of soldier and civilian poets for years is single, and yet its petals have a tenacity of adherence to the stem which is unusual in flowers so sparsely leaved. The American soldier, not over given in the main to sentiment, used to pluck and wear the poppies. Many an American went into battle with a poppy in the button-hole of his blouse.

The American Legion took cognizance of these things when it adopted the poppy as its memorial flower. So far as I know the European poppy of this species does not grow in America.

Flowers Profuse in France.

In France as in America today at this time of the year nature's floral feast is spread. In 1915, two years before the United States entered the war, I was with the French armies in the fields along the Moselle river near Pont-a-Mousson, and not far from the great city of Nancy, which at that time was only eight miles from the German line. In that year my sojourn on the eastern front included a part of April and a part of May. Looking over the fields which were semipeaceful, because at that time the Moselle region was a comparatively quiet sector, one easily could imagine himself to be back in the meadows of America. The blood-red poppy was the only floral stranger to the eye.

The dandelions, the buttercups, the daisies and the clover all grew abundantly in the fields, and so far as the unscientific eye could determine, there was no difference between the species of these plants growing there in the embattled fields of France, and those growing in the peaceful fields of America.

In the spring of 1915 at memorial time, the thought came to me forcibly that perhaps before long in those fields would be enacted the tragedies which would add to the solemnity and the significance of future Memorial days in the United States. The Lusitania had just been sunk, and news of it had come to France. From that hour it seemed to be the belief of Frenchmen, and of such Americans as were in France, that the entrance of the United States into the war was inevitable. The future gave substance to the thought.

Hindu Music.

Be it in devotion, in love or in patriotism, the daily life of the Hindu all the year round pulsates with the rhythm of music. The shepherd on the meadow, the farmer on the rice field, the boatman on the river, the fisherman on the lake, the corn grinder at the millstone, the sawyer at the lumber yard, the weaver at the loom, the washerman at the pool, the mason building houses, the snake charmers or jugglers on the streets, the children in school and the priest at the temple—they all sing songs as they perform their respective duties. Something for the uplift of their souls and others to beguile the tedium of their work.

The fragrant freshness of Hindu music and the fresh fragrance of the message of India's melody are sure to make a marked impression on the minds of those who hear it, but critical

TWO OF A KIND

By GEORGE E. STREETER

(Copyright.)

He sat in front of the post office every working day throughout the year. No one seemed to know his real name, but the townspeople called him Armless John, and being otherwise remarkable for a peculiar kind of stammer, he was for some years the object of pity. Around his neck he wore a sign bearing the following rather ambiguous appeal:

KIND FRIENDS
Please help a POOR man
WILLING but UNABLE to work with a LARGE FAMILY.

According to his own statements he had lost his arms in a variety of ways; the juvenile population had been informed that sharks—or bears—had eaten his lost arms; to very old and simple-minded ladies it was "fire-damp," or "on the railway," or just "cannibals." He had also "fallen from the mast-head," "dropped out of a balloon," and "got caught in an elevator." Sometimes his loss had occurred while "fighting in Cuba," or engaged in "blasting rocks in California." In fact, of "moving accidents," Armless John was a long way ahead of Othello.

His memory being somewhat treacherous, he sometimes had to listen to this kind of a remark:

"Why! you told me last month that you lost your arms in Peru—now you say it was in Australia; you must either be lying, or had a lot of arms to start with."

To all such personal and unkind observations, the stammering beggar would reply somewhat like this:

"Wa-wa-was't I in-sen-si-ble at the ti-ti-ti—at the time? How'd I've s-s-sposed— (He had a habit of breaking off like that.) "But I lost 'em, you b-b-bet."

A man of perhaps fifty years of age, shabbily dressed, stopped one morning in front of Armless John.

"Nice morning," said the stranger. "Fi-a-fine, sir," agreed John.

"Yours is a bad case, my friend," rejoined the other.

"T-terrible, sir."

"How did you lose your arms?"

"Gun p-p-powder explosion at Mel-mel-bourne."

"Australia?"

The beggar shook his head.

"That's my native place," added the stranger.

"I don't mean there. Mel-mel-bourne in Kentucky is the p-p-place, all right."

"You're a liar, Phillips. Do you know Sing Sing?" asked the man.

"Never there," answered John, now looking for the first time in the other man's face.

"Yes, you were, my friend. You and I spent about five years there. What an old fraud you are! How do you manage to dispose of your arms like that?"

John was speechless, as well as stammerless, though still apparently armless.

"I hope ye won't squeal on me, Tom," he remarked.

"That all depends. Have you got a large family, as the sign says?" inquired Tom.

"There's six of us altogether, including the dogs."

"Well, you'll have to pay me so much a week, and I won't say a word," replied the other.

"There ain't enough comin' in to do that," said John dolefully.

"Something must be done," remarked Tom. "I haven't got work, and I can't get any."

"Suppose you come up to the house tonight, and we'll talk things over. Go away now, Tom, do; see you to-night."

The stranger moved away slowly, remarking to an old lady about to drop a coin in the little tin mug: "That's a bad case, mum; the poor fellow lost his arms falling off the roof of a church."

"Did he, indeed?" sympathetically said the lady. "I always give him a trifle when I pass, but I thought he lost his arms in battle."

The ex-convicts were holding a midnight session.

"I've thought out a scheme, Tom, which will pay us both, and we'll be independent of each other. Suppose you go and stand at the library, and be a blind man. There isn't such a fellow in the place. Every day one of the children can bring your dinner down to you, and also lead you home at night. I'm sure you'll make more than I do."

"Don't suit me," answered Tom. "I ain't a-going to keep my eyes shut all day. I think I'd better be a one-armed sailor, suffering from a shark-bite."

"That'll never do," said John. "I'm in the shark business at times, you know. The blind dodge is the only one any good, so far as I can see. I believe there's a fortune in being a 'Poor Blind Man.'"

"I can't see it," answered the doubting Thomas.

"You're not supposed to see anything," replied John, with a laugh, which the other did not relish.

In a few days there appeared a totally sightless man in town, carrying a small, simple sign—

PITY THE BLIND

His first day was very wearisome, but Tom got through it all right, and had a good many coins as a result. He did well, and very soon the receipts of Armless John fell off.

"Tom's simply ruining my business," said John to his wife one evening. "All day long old women come to me, and speak of the 'poor blind man' who lost his sight through reading a Bible with too close print. I wish something'd happen to him."

Strange as it may seem, but within a week, while the little girl was handing something to eat to the blind man, Towser, the dog, caught Tom by the leg and caused that victim of close biblical study not only to shout and use sundry passages not found in any volume, but also led him to open his eyes, in the presence of a wondering and sarcastic crowd, including an officer of the law, who at once took charge of the sham Bartimeus, and introduced him next day to the magistrate.

"Charge of vagrancy, your honor. Been pretendin' to be blind, your honor, but I've been suspecting him for days. Yesterday a dog bit him, and he opened his eyes, and when he saw me he started to run away, your honor?"

"Whose dog was it?" asked the judge, detecting the possibility of another case.

"Belonged to a little girl, your honor; daughter of that no-armed man," replied the officer.

The judge lectured Tom and imposed a sentence of three months in jail, and warned him that should the dog die, the owner, "that poor cripple," would have remedy against him at civil law. "That poor cripple," as you call him," said Tom, "has got arms."

"This is strange," said the judge. "Constable, inquire into this, and if you find the prisoner's story true, bring that other fraud before me tomorrow."

Constable Flynn "inquired" into the matter, and found that Armless John, Mrs. Armless John, and family had left town the previous evening, shortly after the arrest of Thomas.

Now, gentle reader:

This tale offers the following for the consideration of a gullible and patient people:

1. Fakers are takers—but take 'em easy.
2. Beware of the Dog—and the POOR BLIND MAN.
3. Be sure your FRIENDS will find you out.
4. The "far-seeing" public is—oh, so blind.
5. Help others out—of town.

HELPED BURGLAR TO ESCAPE

Four-Year-Old Miss Is Regretting That She Was So Polite to Her Visitor.

Burglars always have been the pet aversion of Margaret Bearsley of Omaha, eight years of age. She admits she is just scared to death of a burglar.

When it was too hot to play Margaret slipped into her nightgown and crept up on the lounge in the guest room to rest.

Looking up from the wallpaper sample book with which she was amusing herself Margaret beheld a strange man standing by the dresser. He wore a workman's black cap and carried some electric-light cords.

"Oh," he said pleasantly, "I'm the electric-light man. I've come to inspect the lights and I got sort of mixed up in the rooms."

"I'll show you the way," volunteered Margaret, and she jumped up, slipped on a tiny kimono and escorted the electric-light man all through the upstairs. Now the police are looking for the man with a black cap and two electric light cords and Margaret's family call her "the burglar's pal."

An Indian Santa.

The Jolly Old Saint Nick of white children did not visit the Indian reservation in central New York this year. In his stead there was a real Indian Santa with a headgear of feathers and other garments worn by Indians when Santa first came to America. He was trimmed with corn tassels and in place of a whip, which to the Indian children means cruelty, he carried a corn stalk to drive his team.

None of the little red babies on the bleak reservation were forgotten. He left them arrows, snow snakes, corn bread stuffed with fruit, cookies shaped like pine trees and chipmunks and a kind of sausage made from the livers of wild animals. Honey made up for the lack of sugar. Spruce churches, the Indian Welfare Society and other allied organizations were active in preparing this Christmas.

Stirred Up a Pudding.

One Sunday some friends of ours were spending the day with us. While I was preparing dinner the woman came into the kitchen and asked me if there was anything she could do to help me. I told her she could stir up a chocolate pudding. She fixed it and when it came time for our dessert my husband, who is always saying things he hadn't ought to, remarked: "Edith, this is the poorest pudding I ever knew you to make."—Exchange.

A Saving to Our Patrons of $2,500.00

Our selling schedule for June, July, August and September is Fifty Pianos. We will allow to each purchaser of a piano or player piano a reduction of fifty dollars off our regular prices now in force. We are strictly one price house and this reduction is made at this time to reduce our present stock.

The sale of fifty pianos in the above time will secure for us sufficient saving to allow each purchaser a reduction of fifty dollars. This is a straight forward business proposition in a straight forward way by a house that has been established since 1896.

If you are in the market for a piano or a Player piano at this time or not it will be of interest to you to investigate our prices and terms.

This sale offers to every one the same opportunity to buy one of the world's best makes of pianos at a reduction.

Will you be the one to take advantage of this special sale? We will change your 65 note player to an 88 note player at a moderate price.

SCHELLSBURG

The fine rains we had the latter part of last week sure did come in good as the crops and garden were badly in need of them.

Mr. Joe Daley and family and Mr. Samuel Ripple, of Windber, were visitors at T. H. Rock's on Sunday.

Quite a number of the I. O. O. F. members and their families attended the I. O. O. F. Memorial services at Shanksville on Sunday.

The ladies of the Reformed church will hold a chocolate social on the Reformed church lawn on Saturday evening. All are welcome.

W. G. Colvin and family and their guests, Mrs. Hyde and family spent Sunday with their daughter, Mrs. M. V. Brant, at Cairnbrook.

Mr. Frank Mark and bride arrived here on Saturday evening and were given a serenade by the young folks. Mr. Mark is the machinist at the Ideal garage.

T. H. Rock and John Culp were in New Buena Vista Monday afternoon on business.

Our summer school will close this week.

W. H. Beaver is treating his porch to a coat of paint. W. S. Whitmore is doing the work.

Mr. Henry Horn, as street commissioner, with a number of men and teams, were fixing the roads and streets last week. We are glad they have made a start and hope they keep on until the streets are all in first class condition. Since the council has made a start to have the streets in a better condition, we do hope that everyone will take pride enough to have the side-walks and lawns in front of their homes nice. It takes only a little extra work and the writer knows that the satisfaction of having the lawns nice pays for the extra work. Where there are vacant lots facing the street, I think the side walks could at least be made passable by either the owner or some one else. We would like to see the streets of our town made as nice and clean as possible.

The teachers elected for our schools for the coming winter are: Prof. George L. Wolfe, Miss Acker and Miss Bess Hull.

Rev. A. B. VanOrmer and family, of Huntingdon, spent a few days recently with his father, Dr. W. W. VanOrmer.

Wanamaker Again

"It is not wise" says John Wanamaker, "to hoard money, but it is wise to lay it up for a rainy day without becoming miserly".
